Formation

In August 1862, Colonel Michael Corcoran was released from Confederate prison after his capture at First Bull Run. Corcoran visited the 69th New York National Guard (NYNG) the old 69th New York State Militia (NYSM), at Fort Lyon, Virginia. The 69th NYSM had been re-designated the 69th NYNG in April and had been mustered into federal service in May. Corcoran informed his old command of his desire to form a second Irish Brigade, stating that he wanted the 69th to be the first regiment of that new brigade.²⁰⁶ Lieutenant Colonel Matthew Murphy then asked the regiment whether or not they wished to join and "all answered yes."²⁰⁷ Upon their return to New York, 700 men joined the 69th New York National Guard Artillery Regiment (serving as Infantry) for three years or the war.²⁰⁸ Corcoran returned to New York City to a hero's reception and immediately began organizing his brigade.

Mathew Murphy

Mathew Murphy who was only 23 years old enrolled to serve three years and was mustered in as the Colonel on November 17, 1862. On September 13, 1862, the 69th New York Volunteer Artillery Regiment was ordered to Camp Scott, Staten Island.²⁰⁹ At Camp Scott, on Staten Island. Several soldiers would desert the Regiment from Camp Scott.

The Regiment was able to enlist new recruits due in part to the high bounties offered for enlistment in the Corcoran's Legion. In September, for example, the National War Committee pledged an additional $50 on top of the regular enlistment bounty for those who joined the Corcoran's Legion in the next ten days.²¹⁰ Additionally the 69th New York was authorized a veteran Bonus for all members of that organization who joined the new 69th Regiment serving in Corcoran's Legion.²¹¹

Fenian Connections

Corcoran's Fenian membership was probably a strong impetus for his fellow Fenians to join. Indeed, for them, the impending liberation of Ireland was more important than the war to save the Union in 1861. To the Fenians, Corcoran was not only a fellow patriot, but also their chieftain in the Gaelic tradition of old. For instance Corcoran, along with Michael Doheny and John O'Mahoney were responsible for organizing the Irish Republican Brotherhood in the United States in 1859. Consequently, Corcoran was able to attract recruits from not only New York but also from other States and Ireland. Corcoran hoped that his Legion would swell into an Irish Division, with units being raised among the Irish communities in Boston, New Haven and Philadelphia.²¹²

Muster into Federal Service

From September to early November 1862 the Regiment drilled and trained for what they hoped would be a decisive role to play in the great struggle, much like their Celtic brothers in their sister Regiment Meagher's Irish Brigade. With the high bounties and the approach of the first draft in November 1862 the recruiting officers had little trouble finding recruits, but the harsh demands of discipline, the boring routine of camp life, and the lures of family and friends in nearby New York City caused many recruits to slip out of Camp Scott at night. Of the 1,100 men who enlisted in the regiment, 265 deserted at Camp Scott before the regiment was mustered into service.²¹³ The Regiment mustered into Federal service September 17, 1862 at Newport News, Virginia.²¹⁴

Green Flags

On November 8, 1862 following orders which were issued by Corcoran, the Regiment broke camp at 1 PM and marched to Clifden Landing.²¹⁵ There they embarked on the steamers Cahawaba, City of Bath, and Pocahontas, for the trip to Fortress Monroe, Virginia.²¹⁶ The jaunty Irish soldiers in new uniforms embarked without incident, but due to inclement weather, the ships were unable to depart for two days. While waiting for the weather to clear, Colonel Murphy discovered that a well-known politician of the 6th ward was on board selling liquor to his men.²¹⁷ In front of the officers of the

69th Murphy exposed this politician as a corruptor of discipline and forced him to return of his soldiers' money.²¹⁸ The Politician was then "ingeniously put ashore amid the jeers and shouts of the men."²¹⁹

Before their departure, the Regiment was presented with a green battle-flag by Judge Charles P. Daly, on behalf of Richard O'Gorman. Richard O'Gorman, a famous New York attorney had represented Corcoran at his court-marshal in 1860 for refusing to parade the 69th NYSM for the Prince of Wales on October 11, 1860. He also presented the 69th New York State Militia with the Green Prince of Wales flag which it carried at First Bull Run. The new flag was embroidered with the Harp and the Fenian Sunburst with the words, in Irish, "First in the van and last in the retreat" above.²²⁰ Colonel Murphy accepted the green flag on behalf of the Regiment and said that those words would be their battle cry and that "they would endeavor to do their duty and live up to that motto."²²¹

Dispute over a Regimental Designation.

Published: New York Times - December 21, 1862

Yesterday afternoon the Special Committee of the Board of Councilmen, consisting of Messrs. Hogan, Lent and Hates, to whom was referred for investigation the matter of the protest against giving the Sixty-ninth Regiment, N.Y.S.N.G., Col. Matthew Murphy, the sum of $10,000, gave a full hearing to the parties interested. The proposition for the appropriation is based upon the pledge of the Common Council, given in a series of resolutions adopted last September, that any militia regiment from the City volunteering into the National army for either nine months or three years, should be entitled to $10,000 from the City Treasury for their regimental fund. It was introduced in the Board of Aldermen by Mr. Walsh, and passed there, but when it came up in the Board of Councilman a protest against it was presented by Mr. Morgan Jones, signed by Major Bagley, in behalf of a number of the old officers of the original Sixty-ninth Regiment.

Col. Murphy first addressed the Committee, and presented many facts, in a clear and able manner, to show that the regiment which he commands, and which is now at the seat of war, is the "Original Jacobs," and therefore entitled to the money. The chief points were an account of the repeated assurances of the Board of Officers of the regiment, to Gen. Corcoran, that the corps would volunteer into his "Irish Legion;" an order from Adjt.-Gen. Hillhouse, issued last October, excusing the regiment from the Fall parade for inspection, because the regiment had volunteered into the National army, and ordering Brig.-Gen. Ewen to modify his order relative to the parade and inspection to that effect; and a presentation of the muster-in rolls of the regiment, showing that they now have mustered into the National army more than the complement -- eight full battalions -- required by the Common Council in order to be entitled to $10,000 from the City.

Major Bagley replied at considerable length, mainly calling the attention of the Committee to the following representations: That the officers had no right to tender the services of the regiment without the consent of the men, which was not given; that the pledge to Gen Corcoran to volunteer into his Brigade was with the condition of being allowed to elect their own officers, the same as they did under the State law, which condition was violated by Gen. Corcoran, who appointed relatives to office, and exercised so arbitrary a course of action in this respect, that a large portion of the officers of the regiment withdrew from it and are now in the City; that the order given by Gen. Hillhouse was procured by request, in order to save the regiment from injuring Gen. Corcoran 's recruiting operations by a snow of their small numbers: that the officers remaining here have made a formal claim for the State designation of Sixty-ninth Regiment, N.Y.S.N.G., because several hundred of the old members, many of whom served in the first three months' campaign, are here, and which claim is awaiting the decision of Judge Advocate Gen. Anthon, to whom it has been referred; and that very few of the old members went out with Col. Murphy, the name of "Sixty-ninth Regiment," &c., being used only to attract enlistments.

Quartermaster Tully said the question was altogether of a legal character. He had no objection to Col. Murphy's regiment getting $10,000, but not as the Sixty-ninth Regiment, New-York State National Guard, because given in that view it would injure the claim pending before Gen. Anthon. The Committee adjourned without indicating how they will report upon the subject.

Fortress Monroe and Consolidation

Upon their arrival at Fortress Monroe, Newport News, the 69th New York had to be reorganized because the United States Army would only accept three officers for each company and the 69th, as it was organized as an Artillery regiment, had four. This caused many officers to become supernumerary. Furthermore the Legion was consolidated which increased discontent.²²² Corcoran wrote a letter to Judge Daly on November 28, 1862:

“The work of the consolidation was a disagreeable duty to be obliged to perform, in as much as some officers were rendered supernumerary, amongst them are some of my best friends and good and efficient officers, yet as they had not recruited the number of men required by law, the officers

charged with the duty of consolidation was obliged to give preference to those who had recruited the largest numbers.²²³ Corcoran lamented that if he had only been allowed "a little more time" to recruit, he could have filled all of the regiments.²²⁴

At Newport News the Regiment continued to drill and train. Colonel Murphy was "indefatigable."²²⁵ As always Corcoran continued to maintain strict discipline, understanding the value of training once on the battlefield, no "row or scrimmage" occurred.²²⁶ Corcoran prohibited the sale of liquor in camp, declaring that any found by the provost guard would be destroyed.²²⁷

The Regiment began Thanksgiving Day 1862 with Mass celebrated by Father Dillon followed by a grand review. An officer of the 69th New York wrote in a letter to the Irish American stating the "defiant front and stately tread were worthy of veterans" offering a display which was "splendid indeed."²²⁸ Christmas was celebrated in an equally festive and devout manner. Despite the prevailing "despondent" mood in New York following the battle of Fredericksburg and slaughter of the Irish Brigade, the morale of the Irish Legion remained high.²²⁹

On Monday December 29, 1862 the Regiment was ordered to break camp, which they did in less than two hours. They then sailed to Norfolk.²³⁰ Upon arrival, Corcoran requested that Lt. Manahan play on his bugle. "The Groves of Blarney" and "Garryowen," were played to the delight of all.²³¹ The 69th then "Double-quickened" through the city to the Railroad, where they boarded a train for Suffolk, about 20 miles south-west.

Suffolk, Virginia, had been occupied by Federal troops since May of 1862. With railroads to Petersburg, Norfolk and Weldon, North Carolina, running through the town, it controlled the land approaches to the mouth of the James River north of the Great Dismal Swamp.²³² Suffolk also sat aside the main lines of communication with coastal North Carolina. Union Major General John J. Peck took command of the town in September of 1862 and started building works. These works, supported by forts, took six months to build, and would stretch for fifteen miles.²³³

Upon reaching Suffolk, the Regiment bivouacked on the tracks, lying on the cold ground. The next several days were spent on fatigue duty, completing the defenses of Suffolk and digging rifle pits. Several of the 69th New York's companies were pressed into service to garrison network forts and were becoming "Practicing Artillerists."²³⁴ Garrison life however soon became monotonous and routine, causing many soldiers to dream their fondest dream of "Liberating Ireland," and the common soldiers did not have to look far to rekindle the great national dream.²³⁵ Neither Corcoran nor Murphy had resigned from key leadership positions in the Fenian Brotherhood. In addition they entertained visits from John O'Mahoney, the Head Centre of the Fenian Brotherhood. These were hardly social visits.²³⁶

The Regiment would get its first taste of battle in January. On the evening of January 29, a Rebel Brigade with several artillery batteries under Confederate General Prior advanced across the Blackwater River. At about 1 am on January 30, the Regiment marched for the Blackwater. Under Corcoran's command was not only the Legion, but also the 11th Pennsylvania Cavalry, 13th Indiana, 6th Massachusetts, 167th Pennsylvania, 130th New York and three batteries of artillery.

Deserted House

As the 69th troops left Suffolk, they began singing but were ordered to stop as not to warn the Rebels of their approach.²³⁷ The road was a morass and men began to fall into holes and lost their shoes in the mud.²³⁸ At about 5 am the Regiment surprised a Rebel bivouac at the Deserted House, about 10 miles from Suffolk, and came under intense Rebel artillery fire. The 69th was ordered into a sunken road to escape the bombardment.

At about 5:15 am Corcoran ordered an advance but the 69th which had so far borne the brunt of the casualties, was ordered 800 paces rearward to reduce losses.²³⁹ Later the 69th was ordered forward to support a Battery of the 7th Massachusetts Artillery. After pushing the enemy back and halting two counterattacks, the Regiment halted for breakfast. That afternoon, the Regiment pushed five miles further to Pocasin's Creek, only to find the enemy had fled.²⁴⁰

The casualty report for Deserted House included:

BIRMINGHAM, JOHN.—Age, 10 years. Enlisted, September 27, 1862, at New York City, to serve three years; mustered in as private, Co. E, November 17, 1862; missing in action since January 30, 1863, at Deserted House

On the evening of January 30th the Regiment headed back to Suffolk arriving early on the morning of January 31, after marching 32 miles in 24 hours.²⁴¹ The 69th New York lost 3 Killed and 10 wounded.²⁴² The Regiment suffered its baptismal fire and acquitted itself well. The 69th and its Colonel, Matthew Murphy, played an especially distinguished role.

After the fight at Deserted House, life once again settled down into the usual dull routine of camp life. In February, Corcoran departed to visit New York and Albany. While in New York, Corcoran testified at a Court of Inquiry called by Major Bagley and the Officers of the 69th National Guard. This Court was to determine which 69th Regiment was the real 69th National Guard.²⁴³ The Court settled the dispute by designating the 69th Regiment serving on active duty with Corcoran's Legion as the 182nd New York Volunteer Infantry Regiment although this designation was often ignored. At this time in the Regiment's history, there were again three 69th Infantry Regiments at the same time, the 69th Regiment New York National Guard serving as a militia unit in New York City, headquartered in the armory and commanded by Major Bagley, the 69th New York Volunteer Infantry Regiment serving as the 1st Regiment of Meagher's Irish Brigade and commanded by Colonel Nugent, and the 69th New York National Guard Artillery Regiment serving with Corcoran's Legion and commanded by Colonel Murphy. This situation was similar to the first ten years of the Regiment's history when three 69th Regiments also existed. All of these regiments are in the lineage of the 69th Infantry Regiment which exists today.

Saint Patrick's Day

The Regiment celebrated Saint Patrick's Day by decorating the camp and holding a parade. This was the first St. Patrick's Day parade ever held in Suffolk, Virginia. The Regiment formed for parade at 12:30 and "The 69th in their Artillery Uniforms and the 164th in their Zouave Uniforms present a brilliant contrast to the Infantry Uniforms of the 170th and the 155th," wrote one observer.²⁴⁴ They returned to camp around 5:30 pm and were dismissed. Food and beverages were sent to every regiment of the Legion.²⁴⁵ A dinner was held at the "Hotel" for the Officers of the Legion and their guests which continued until the early morning hours.²⁴⁶

Matthew Murphy left command of the 69th and assumed command of the Legion on April 9, 1863 as Corcoran was now commanding the 1st Division, 7th Corps. In early April, the paymaster paid the soldiers and most of the money they received was sent home to families.²⁴⁷ Elements of General Ambrose Burnside's 9th Corps, Army of the Potomac, arrived at the Suffolk in early April. However more importantly, Confederate General James Longstreet arrived with two divisions of his Corps, Army of Northern Virginia.

Richmond had detached General Longstreet in early February to defend Richmond. Longstreet was put in charge of the Department of Virginia and North Carolina.²⁴⁸ Brigadier General Roger Pryor, who had been soundly beaten by Corcoran's Legion at the Battle of the Deserted House, informed Longstreet that there were large stocks of hogs and corn in the Northeast North Carolina. Seeing the opportunity to seize these invaluable stores, Longstreet moved upon the area on April 11.²⁴⁹ In order to seize these stores, Longstreet had to tie down the 29,000 men strong garrison of Suffolk, which he did by laid siege although it appears that Longstreet had no intention of actually trying to take the town.²⁵⁰

Upon learning that Longstreet's troops were advancing upon Suffolk on April 11, the Regiment was ordered under arms as they awaited their next challenge. Corcoran alerted his troops around 3 am. As Colonel Corcoran approached the hospital of the 155th NYV, he was stopped by an intoxicated Lieutenant Colonel Kimball of the 9th Regiment NYV, Hawkin's Zouaves, who demanded the countersign and refused to let Corcoran and his staff pass.²⁵¹ After Corcoran had asked several times to pass, Kimball made what appeared to be a move for his revolver. Corcoran promptly shot him. Kimball died a short time after.²⁵²

Later that morning, the enemy drove the pickets of the Legion from South Quay Road and Edgerton Road, beginning the "Siege" of Suffolk. The "Long Roll" was beat by the drummer boys and the Regiment manned the breastworks.²⁵³ The Legion was deployed to the right of Fort Dix. Here the Legion formed for battle with the 69th on the right, the 164th and the 170th on the left and the 155th in reserve. Although now serving as infantry, the soldiers in Lieutenant E.K. Butler's Company, Co. C, stationed inside Fort Union, were becoming accomplished artillerymen. Indeed infantrymen-turned-cannoneers were able to hit targets a mile away on the first shot.²⁵⁴ Meanwhile, Captain Sullivan, Commander of Company A, held Fort Halleck passing the time constructing "a most pleasant garden."²⁵⁵

With his usual aggressiveness, General Corcoran took the offensive on April 24, leading an expedition up the Edenton Road to Bern's Farmhouse. Corcoran was determined to eliminate the advanced rebel Sharpshooters who were killing his troops. Corcoran led 5,000 Infantry, 400 Cavalry, and 2 Batteries of artillery forward. A skirmish ensued and Confederate General George

Pickett's Division was driven from their rifle pits. Corcoran's men burned the buildings which the Confederates had used for cover. The Legion, on the right of the line, was only lightly engaged and suffered only a few casualties.²⁵⁶ After burning the buildings, Corcoran's troops returned to Suffolk. On May 2d the Rebels ended the siege of Suffolk

On May 13, Colonel Robert Foster led a two week expedition through the vicinity of Suffolk. Tracks were ripped up by the Yankees at Carrville on the 14th. Twenty-six year old Private Michael McIntyre of Company C, who had enlisted for three years in the Regiment on September 16, 1862 in New York, was wounded in action on May 16, 1863, at Carrsville

The next few weeks the Regiment spent on the offensive attacking and capturing several buildings from rebel sharpshooters, ripping up railroad tracks and destroying everything that could be of use to the enemy.²⁵⁷ The Regiment then headed north to Fairfax, Virginia, where it would spend the next 10 months.

With the termination of Federal operations at Suffolk, the Regiment and Legion were transferred to the Department of Washington, 22nd Corps and placed in Corcoran's Division whose primary mission was guarding the Railroad connection between Alexandria and the Army of the Potomac at Falmouth.

HENRATY, JAMES.—Age, 25 years. Enlisted, September 18, 1862, at New York City, to serve three years; mustered in as private, Co. D, November 17, 1862; wounded, August 17, 1863, at Centreville

General Corcoran described his new assignment in October: "My whole command covers an area of thirty miles, a rather large amount of country for such a force."²⁵⁸ Corcoran was assigned to guard the railroad between Centreville and Bull Run. The Regiment was assigned an area within this stretch to guard near Centreville. Confederate Major, John S. Mosby who in early 1863 was authorized to form and take command of the 43rd Battalion Virginia Cavalry, Partisan Rangers Mosby's Rangers often attacked the area with his raiders. The task of guarding this section of railroad must have been exceptionally unpleasant for the quite numerous Fenians in the Regiment, many of whom had been on the other side of the coin back in Ireland.²⁵⁹ In Ireland Corcoran had been a member of a band of Rebels known as the "Ribbonmen" while serving as a Crown Revenue Constable.

When Corcoran was discovered by the authorities, he fled to New York joining the 69th. He and many of the officers and soldiers in the Regiment fully understood not only the nature of the task but also the futility of his mission. In a letter to Judge Daly dated August 14, 1863 Corcoran wrote:

"The only prospect for me here is one of interminable and almost entire uselessness, and I would like in Justice not only to myself, but to the officers and men of the "Legion" that some better opportunity of service should be afforded us".²⁶⁰ Three days later, a disgruntled Corcoran wrote to President Abraham Lincoln: "I respectfully request that I may be ordered to another command."²⁶¹ Corcoran emphasized how the transfer could be made without the "slightest injury to the interests of the service."²⁶² However, Corcoran's pleas were not answered. But Corcoran was not the only one to find the new assignment of fighting guerrillas most disagreeable. His sentiments were shared by many in the Regiment.

Perhaps more than their commander, the men of the Irish Legion despised their assignment of fighting guerrillas. In an October letter to the Irish American an officer probably from the Regiment wrote:

"The health of the Legion is good; but the men are damnably tired of Centreville. To what to compare this place I know not. It is a gloomy, dismal, lonely waste- death inscribed upon every piece of wood, upon every mound, upon every hill, in every crevice- all around death, death! It is the Halsitatron (Sic) of death and living skeletons. The Bull Run battlefield looks ghostly in the distance and recalls no pleasant recollections. Centreville! We wish never to see thee more! Rather, for it is far more preferable the region of the dismal swamp. Rather any place to Centreville."²⁶³

National Convention of the Fenian Brotherhood

Shortly after the letter was written, the Irish Legion was transferred into the 3d Division, 5th Corps, much to the satisfaction of the Regiment.²⁶⁴ November 1863 was an eventful month for the Regiment. The first National Convention of the Fenian Brotherhood was held in Chicago. Here, they voted to make their society an open organization. Prior to the convention the Fenians were a secret revolutionary society, which placed its members at risk of ex-communication from the Catholic Church. The two leading officers of the Irish Legion, General Corcoran and Matthew Murphy, were elected to the central council of the Brotherhood. In addition, Francis Welply of the 69th was also a signatory to the finished document which the Chicago convention approved, although these three signed by Proxy.²⁶⁵

Also, and most significantly in contrast to the better publicized 69th Regiment of the Irish Brigade 69th Regiment of the Irish Legion was the only military unit to have three representatives at the convention, indicating a significantly higher Fenian sympathy and membership than in any other unit in the Army of the Potomac. The Irish Brigade units had no signatories to the document.

Michael Corcoran 's Death

As Christmas 1863 approached, visitors came to spend the holidays. Among them were the wives of Generals Meagher and Corcoran. On December 22, Corcoran and Meagher headed for Fairfax enroute to Washington to meet several ladies on their way to visit from New York.²⁶⁶ Corcoran mounted Meagher's spirited horse, which had won the Irish Brigade Horse race on St. Patrick's Day 1863, and challenged Meagher to a race.²⁶⁷ Meagher accepted, and Corcoran took the lead and rounded a wide bend on the dusty road. Corcoran had a seizure and was thrown from the horse.²⁶⁸ Corcoran was carried back to his quarters where "he lay "insensible" until his death two and a half hours later.²⁶⁹

On Christmas Eve, 1863 Corcoran's body was removed from his quarters and escorted by the 69th and the 164th Regiments, along with a battery of Artillery, and squadron of cavalry to the railway station for the journey north. Corcoran was buried on December 27th at Calvary Cemetery in Queens, New York. Among the pallbearers were Generals Meagher and Dodge, Colonels Matthew Murphy, John O'Mahoney (Head Centre of the Fenian Brotherhood), J.R. McIvor, Hugh C. Flood, ex-Colonel McEvily and Lt. Colonel Reid representing the Regiment.²⁷⁰ The Honor Guard and Escort was the first regiment of the Phoenix Brigade (99th NYSNG).²⁷¹

In tribute to Corcoran, the Officers of the Regiment along with all the officers of the Irish Legion resolved to wear black crepe on their left arms for 30 days as a badge of mourning.²⁷² In a February letter to the Irish American an officer of the Legion wrote that the Corcoran Legion was faithfully continuing the legacy of their beloved General. "But without a representative head."²⁷³ He continued: "Though gone, his memory lives, and his legion exists. His name we will cherish and his deeds endeavor to emulate".²⁷⁴

Corcoran's death was also mourned among the Irish community and particularly among the Fenians. For Michael Corcoran was not only the former military commander of the Fenian Brotherhood, but one of the three founders. The Secretary of War was going to replace Corcoran with General Meagher but General Halleck wanted General Tyler to take the position.²⁷⁵

The Irish Legion continued the dreary routine of trying to capture Mosby's Raiders and the routine of camp life. On January 20, 1864, a ball was organized by the sergeants of the Regiment. This was originally to have been a Christmas Ball but it was postponed because of Corcoran's death. The Ball celebrated the first anniversary of the Battle of the Deserted House.²⁷⁶ On St. Patrick's Day the Regiment celebrated with normal elaborate festivities.²⁷⁷

Spotsylvania Court House

With the opening of Grant's spring campaign and abandonment of Falmouth as his principal supply base, defending the railroad became unimportant. Consequently, the Regiment was ordered to Alexandria and from there, south west to Grant's new supply base at Belle Plain.²⁷⁸ On May 17, the Regiment was ordered to report to Army of the Potomac Headquarters at Spotsylvania, west of Fredericksburg.²⁷⁹ The Regiment re-assigned from the 6th Corps to the 4th Brigade, 2d Division, 2d Corps. In May at Spotsylvania Court House, the Regiment joined the first line of attack on the Rebel works, advancing on the division's left flank. The Regiment plowed into Lee's rifle pits and light works and pressed on 500 yards to the main line waiting for the rest of the Brigade to come up.²⁸⁰ The Regiment was ordered to hold this advance position which they did until ordered to fall back to the left and the Po River.

The casualty list for the Battle of Spotsylvania included:

BARRY, MATHEW, J.—Age, 20 years. Enrolled, September 5, 1862, at New York City, to serve three years, mustered in as first sergeant, Co. E, November 17, 1862; promoted sergeant major, April 1, 1863; mustered in as second lieutenant, Co. E, July 1, 1863; wounded in action, May 18, 1864, at Spotsylvania

Cold Harbor

While the standoff continued along the banks of Topotomony Creek, General Philip Sheridan's Cavalry Corps, flush from its triumphant raiding mission, encountered Rebel cavalry and infantry on May 31, at a sleepy crossroads town named Cold Harbor. The Rebels were driven from their positions, and Lee counterattacked, but Sheridan's Cavalrymen held until reinforced by the Federal 6th Corps, and later by General Baldy Smith's 18th Corps. The two Corps attacked on June 1, and took the Southern rifle pits. Grant felt that an assault at 4:00 a.m. June 2 would destroy the Southern position. Hancock's 2d Corps was ordered to Cold Harbor, but arrived after 7:00 a.m. The attack was postponed 24 hours, during which Lee's Rebels dug in and prepared a series of trenches and works whose like had never been seen on the American Continent. Any hope of success was gone.

At 4:00 a.m. June 3, the Regiment attacked at Cold Harbor, charging on the Division's extreme left. The Regiment advanced to within 50 yards of the enemy works but was unable to take the Southern position owing to both a deep ravine and the heavy fire. Nevertheless, the Regiment along with the rest of the Irish Legion managed to hold their position for more than an hour.²⁸³ Finally, the hard hit Regiment fell back 150 Yards to the crest of a hill and dug in.²⁸⁴

Petersburg

On the night of June 12, 1864, the Regiment, along with the 2d division, 2d Corps, secretly moved to the James River and crossed at Windmill Point on steam boats. After a brief rest, the Regiment advanced on Petersburg below Richmond. Here, they participated in the initial assault on Petersburg during the evening of June 16th. They attacked along the Petersburg Road, east of the city, drove in the enemy pickets, and charged onward in the face severe fire however they were unable to take the enemy works.²⁸⁵ Consequently, they dug in about 30 yards from the Rebel works and held this advanced position until the evening of June 17th.²⁸⁶

Three days later, the Confederate General William Mahone launched a hard-hitting counter-attack which struck the left and rear of 1st Division, Second Corps. The force of this brilliant counterstroke caused the extreme left unit, the legendary Irish Brigade including the 69th NYSV, to break and run along with the rest of the division.²⁸⁷ The panic soon spread to the 3d division. In addition, most of 2d Brigade, 2d division, was surprised and captured almost to the man.²⁸⁸ Trying to reverse the day's fortunes, Gibbon advanced the command of General Byron R. Pierce consisting of First Brigade, 2d Division, with the Regiment and the 170th New York detached. These Units were ordered to take back the lost ground at all costs. A member of the 42nd New York wrote:

“Just as night fell the Corcoran Legion was ordered to charge and retake the lost ground. The Rebels let them come well forward before they fired a shot; but when they got within good range they fired, and, my God! How they piled the ground with dead and dying. For two hours the wounded of the Legion kept coming in, and many were left to die in front of the Rebel Position.”²⁸⁹

With the Rebels dug in, Gibbon wisely ordered no additional attacks which were sure to be suicidal. That night the General Mahone's Confederates quietly evacuated their position. In part because of high losses, the Second Division was reorganized, and the Regiment and rest of the Irish Legion now became the Second Brigade. The casualty report for Petersburg included:

Reams Station

The Regiment returned once again to Petersburg on the August 21st.²⁹⁰ While at Petersburg, the Regiment received orders to march for Ream's Station, which was reached on August 23. On August 25, Murphy's troops were ordered to hold a line of rifle pits just south of Ream's station, with their left resting on the Railroad.²⁹¹ In the early evening, the enemy struck hard, unleashing fire upon the front and both flanks of the 2d Corps. Around 6:00 p.m., the battered regiments of the 1st Division broke and ran. The Regiment held its position and withdrew only when it appeared they risked captured.²⁹² Dean Wilson a Second Lieutenant in Corcoran's Irish Legion described the scene of disaster in a letter to Matthew Byrne;

“Many of our troops would not leave the pits at all, preferring capture and imprisonment to running the chances of getting out from the destructive artillery fire that was concentrated on us from all points front and rear, right and left.²⁹³

Hancock's Second Corps suffered heavily at Ream's Station and the Regiment was no exception. Regiments which lost their colors in the action were forbidden to carry them again. One general explained: "The officers and men of the command should understand that their colors should be the last thing surrendered, and that in all well regulated military organizations it is considered a disgrace for a majority of the command to return from the field of battle without them."²⁹⁴ General Hancock, Second Corps Commander, enthusiastically supported the rebuke. In fact, He even wanted a similar system emplaced throughout the whole army.²⁹⁵

Reduced to only 116 members and under the command of Captain M. Doheny the Regiment was engaged in fatigue duties, with the rest of the 2d Corps around Petersburg for the next two months. The casualty report for Ream's Station included:

Hatcher's Run

In November, the Regiment and the Irish Legion were defending the Dunn House Battery and Battery No. 9 in the Petersburg Lines. As the Second Corps took to the field again on December 7th the Regiment and Corcoran's Legion was left behind to hold the 2d Division's lines.²⁹⁹ The Regiment was now under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Coonan.³⁰⁰ Later in the month, General Gibbon ordered each Brigade commander rank the regiments in their Brigades. The 69th was deemed to the crack regiment of the Irish Legion.³⁰¹

The Regiment was once again at Hatcher's Run in February of 1865. On the morning of February 5th they deployed to the left of the Armstrong House, holding the right of the brigade's line.³⁰² Corcoran's Legion dug in while the Regiment moved out on picket.³⁰³ At about 4 p.m. the Rebels suddenly attacked from the woods and the Regiment was driven back after about 15 minutes of skirmishing.³⁰⁴ After dark, the works were improved and an abatis was thrown up in front of the line.³⁰⁵ The greatest loss was Colonel Murphy, who went down mortally wounded. He died of his wounds on April 16, 1865 in the Field Hospital at City Point, Virginia.

The casualty report for the action at Hatcher's Run in February 1865 included:

O'BRIEN, DENNIS.—Age, 25 years. Enlisted at Jamaica, to serve one year, and mustered in as private, Co. D, October 21, 1864; captured in action, February 5, 1865, at Hatcher's Run

MARTIN, THOMAS.—Age, 30 years. Enlisted, September 15, 1862, at New York City, to serve three years; mustered in as private, Co. C, November 17, 1862; wounded in action, June 3, 1864, at Cold Harbor; killed in action, February 5, 1865, at Armstrong's Farm

MURPHY, MATTHEW.—Age, 23 years. Enrolled, September 3, 1862, at New York City, to serve three years; mustered in as colonel, November 17, 1862; wounded in action, May 18, 1864, at Spotsylvania, Va., and February 5, 1865, at Hatcher's Run; died of his wounds, April 16, 1865

Lee Abandons Petersburg

After Lee abandoned Petersburg, the Regiment remained in the lines.³⁰⁶ On April 1st they were at Crow's Farm, where three lines of works were erected. At 7:00 a.m. the following morning, the Regiment was ordered to assault the Rebel works in columns of fours.³⁰⁷ The soldiers charged forward to storm the defenses and prisoners.³⁰⁸ The Regiment continued on, attacking another Fort beyond and capturing it and another gun and prisoners.³⁰⁹ The following day, the Regiment and the Irish Legion was detached to guard the cavalry train. They were not re-attached with the Division until April 6.

On April 6 the Regiment along with the Division pursued the retreating Rebels for three days before encamping at Clover Hill on April 10, 1864. The Regiment stayed there until the end of the war.³¹⁰ The Regiment participated in the Grand Review and remained in Federal Service until July 15, 1865 when they were mustered out. The first time a Adjutant General's Report listed the regiment as the 182nd Infantry Regiment was in 1864 but it always crossed referenced it as the 69th Regiment National Guard Artillery.

259. It is interesting to note that a little over 50 years later a former captain of the 69th N.Y.N.G., J.J. "Ginger" O'Connell, would become chief of staff of the Irish Volunteers. In that capacity he conceived the Idea of "Flying Columns" and the I.R.A.'s guerilla strategy that ultimately not only led to Ireland's independence, but also set the example for most insurgents in the 20th Century. It is pure speculation, but probably not unreasonable speculation, that he may have been influenced by Veterans of the Legion that he met as a Captain of the 69th during the first decade of this century.
